JES

JESUÍTAS, the Jeſuits, a religious order inſtituted by St. Ignatius in the year 1534, and confirmed by Pope Paul III. in the years 1539 and 1540. They are alſo call'd La compáñia de Jeſus, or the ſociety of Jeſus; and the Spaniards vulgarly, though improperly, call them Teatínos, for in reality the Theatins is another congregation of prieſts living in community. Beſides the three vows of poverty, chaſtity, and obedience, which are common to all orders, the Jeſuits take a fourth, which is for miſſions. They have ſpread wonderfully ſince their firſt inſtitution, and gone as far in miſſions as any order, but more particularly in Japan and China, and have had among 'em a very great number of learned men.

JESÚS, the moſt ſacred name of Jeſus.

Prov. Jeſús, y crúzes, y pedrádas en los Andalúzes: Jeſus, and croſſes, and caſting of ſtones againſt the Andaluzians. The Caſtilians, who are a moſt ſincere ſort of people, have made this proverb againſt the Andaluzians, who are more crafty and deceitful, as living near the ſea, and learning of ſtrangers. They call upon the holy name of Jeſus to aſſiſt them againſt thoſe people, make the ſign of the croſs as they do againſt the devil; and, thinking all this too little, add, they muſt throw ſtones at them.

LLA'MAS, a ſort of cattle peculiar to the kingdom of Peru, which the Spaniards call carneros de las indias, or Weſt India ſheep; the fleſh of them is good to eat, as our mutton, and the wool for cloathing; beſides they ſerve for beaſts of burden, like horſes or aſſes, and have no charge of ſhooing, of pack-ſaddles, or corn to feed them, being ſatisfy'd with what graſs they find. There are two ſorts of them, the one call'd pacos, which are woolly, the others are ſmoother, but better for burden. They are all bigger than our largeſt ſheep, and ſomewhat leſs than large calves; their neck is long like a camel's, and they have need of it to graze, being very tall. Some are quite white, others quite black, others grey. Their lambs are the beſt meat in the world. Theſe ſheep are drove in flocks of 100, 500, or 1000 together, like pack-horſes, with their loads of all ſorts of commodities; and it is they that carry all the ſilver from the mines of Potoſi to Arica, which is 70 leagues; and formerly they carry'd it to Arequipa, which is 150 leagues. Every ſheep commonly carries about an hundred weight, or an hundred and a half; but if they are to travel far, they go but 2, 3, or at moſt 4 leagues a-day; if it be but for one day's journey, one of theſe ſheep will carry two hundred weight, or more, and will travel between 8 and 10 leagues. They naturally affect cold, and therefore live moſt on the mountains, and die often with heat in the plains. The ſmooth ſheep will ſometimes ſtop on a ſudden, and ſtand a long time gazing a man in the face, that it will make one laugh to ſee them; but now and then they will take a fright, and run away to the mountain, ſo that not being able to overtake them, they are forc'd, for fear of loſing the plate, to ſhoot them. The pacos, or woolly ſheep, ſometimes take pet under their burden, and lie down, and then they may kill them ſooner than make them riſe. The way the Indians uſe to get them up, is to ſtop, and ſitting down by them, to ſtroke, and make much of them till their anger is over, which is ſometimes two or three hours. F. Joſ. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 45. p. 293.

Prov. La madráſtra y entenáda ſiempre ſon en barája: The ſtepmother and ſtepdaughter are always at variance.

Prov. Madráſtra mádre áſpera, ni de cera, ni de paſta: A ſtepmother an harſh mother, good neither of wax nor of dough. To expreſs that ſtepmothers of no ſort are good.

MA'DRE, a mother. Lat. mater.

Mádre de río, the channel of a river.

Mádre, the matrix, the womb.

Mádre is alſo the common ſewer in a ſtreet, ſo called, becauſe it receives all the kennels that run into it; thence alſo the great drain or trench in the fields, into which all the ſmall ones run, which are therefore called hijuélas, or little daughters.

Mádres, or Matrízes, ſo the founders call the moulds in which they caſt any thing.

Mádre de pérlas, mother of pearl.

Mal de mádre, the diſtemper among women called the fits of the mother.

Prov. Qual la mádre, tal la hija: Like mother, like daughter.

Prov.

Prov. Mádre viéja y camíſa róta, no ſs deſhónra: An old mother and a torn ſhirt are no diſgrace. To ſignify, that age and poverty are no diſhonour, tho' the latter be contemned by the world, yet with virtue it is honourable.

Prov. Mi mádre andadóra, ſinó es en ſu caſa, en tódas las ótras móra: My rambling mother lives in all other houſes but her own. A reproof to gadding women, who love to be in all other houſes of the town but her own.

Prov. Quién no crée a buéna mádre, creéra a mala madraſtra: He that does not believe a good mother, will believe a bad ſtepmother. That is, he who is not pleaſed when he is well, will be forced to be contented when he is worſe.

Prov. Caſáos mádre: Mother marry. This ſhort proverb, they ſay, took its riſe from a widow who had a great mind to marry; but having a ſon grown up who was a ſcholar, he always oppoſed it violently, and ſhe perſiſted in her reſolution; wherefore at length ſhe told him, if he would do one thing ſhe ſhould enjoin him, ſhe would not marry: He conſented; and he being then very full of the itch, ſhe ſaid, if he did not ſcratch himſelf in three days, ſhe would lay aſide all thoughts of an husband. The young man was cloſely watch'd, and before many hours were paſs'd, had occaſion enough to ſcratch, but forbore becauſe of the contract. Thus he continued ſome time; but the itching increaſing, he could not hold at laſt, and ſo falling to ſcratch to his own content, he cry'd out, Mother, marry. The contract was void, and he could reſiſt no longer. It is apply'd to thoſe who conſent others ſhould do what they pleaſe, ſo they have the ſame liberty themſelves.

Prov. Mádre, que cóſa es caſár? Híja, hilár, parír, y llórar. Mother, what is it to marry? Daughter, to ſpin, to bring forth children, and to weep. The daughter asks her mother what matrimony is; ſhe gives her this diſmal account, that it is no other but labour, bearing of children, and trouble. Theſe are the words of ſome unfortunate wife, who ſpoke of matrimony as perhaps ſhe had found, and are uſed by ſuch as have occaſion to it.

Prov. Mádre, caſár, caſár; que carrapíco me quiére llevár: Mother, marry me, marry me; for the gull will carry me away. Carrapico is a ſea-gull, and metaphorically any ſtranger that haunts a place. The daughter adviſes her mother to marry her off quickly, for fear the ſtranger carry her away. To let her know ſhe is in haſte for an huſband, and if not ſoon marry'd, ſhe ſhall run away with the next that asks her. Applicable to young girls that are too forward.

Prov. Bién cuénta la mádre, mejór cuénta el infánte: The mother reckons well, but the child reckons better. For the mother is often miſtaken in her account of going with child, but the infant will be born at its due time.

Prov. La mádre y la híja por dar y tomár ſon amígas: The mother and the daughter are friends by giving and taking. That is, they love one another for what they get of one another. Apply'd to thoſe who entertain friendſhip only for intereſt, which has ſo far prevailed, that even many parents and their children have no other mutual affection, but for what they get of one another.

Prov. La buéna mádre no díze, quiéres? A good mother does not ſay, will you have this? That is, good generous people, if they deſign to give any thing, muſt not ask whether they will have it, but give without asking.

Prov. Mádre y híja víſten úna camíſa: The mother and the daughter wear the ſame ſhift. That is, they are both alike, they have both the ſame qualities, ſignified by the ſhift that is next them; or, as we ſay, Like mother, like daughter; like maſter, like man.

Prov. Mádre no víſte, padre no tuviſte, diáblo te hiziſte: You ſaw no mother, you had no father, and you became a devil. A ſaying of baſtards, who ſometimes never ſee their mothers, being put out to nurſe as ſoon as born, to ſave reputation, and never know their father, who is aſhamed to own them; and therefore having no parents to breed them up, their education is lewd, and they become devils.

Prov. Mádre ardída háze hija tullída: A buſy mother makes a lame daughter. When a mother does every thing, and lets her daughter ſit idle, ſhe makes her fit for nothing, which is as bad as being lame. The ſame is ſaid of maſters who keep idle ſervants, and do their buſineſs themſelves; and of maſters, who ask their ſcholars queſtions, and anſwer themſelves.

Prov. Madre piadóſa cría hija merdóſa: A tender mother breeds a naſty daughter. Becauſe when ſhe is an infant, ſhe will not waſh and clean her for fear ſhe ſhould cry; and when grown up, ſhe will not ſuffer her to put her hand to any thing; and by that means ſhe grows lazy, and conſequently a ſlut.

Prov. Quién tiéne mádre, muéraſele témprano: May he who has a mother be long before he loſes her. Becauſe mothers are moſt tender in their affections, and always ſtudying their childrens good, therefore the proverb wiſhes them long life for the benefit of their children.

Prov. Traſſegálla, porqué no ſépa a la mádre: Rack her off, that ſhe may not taſte of the mother. This advice one young man gave to another, who had complained to him that his wife had many ill habits which ſhe had learned of her mother. The husband underſtood it not, till one day he ſaw him rack off his wines, and turn them out of one cask into another, ſtill leaving the lees behind; when perceiving his meaning, he went home, and removed his houſe far from his wife's mother and acquaintance, and then found he could manage her, and ſhe ſoon forgot all the ill her mother and others taught her. It is good advice in general to remove all youth from that company that teaches them any ill.

Prov. Váſe mi mádre, malaya quién mas hilare, o púta ſea quién mas hilare: My mother is going, a curſe on her that will ſpin any longer, or, may ſhe be a whore who ſpins any longer. This they ſay to ſuch as will not work or mind buſineſs any longer than there are eyes over them.

Prov. Quién mádre tiéne en villa, ſiéte vézes ſe amortéce cáda día: She that has a mother in the town ſwoons away ſeven times a day. This they ſay of lazy wenches, who are put out to ſervice, and pretend ſickneſs and fainting fits, that their mothers may take them home; and of impertinent young wives, who, when their huſbands diſpleaſe them, pretend indiſpoſition, that their mothers may be ſent for.

Prov. Quién no tiéne mádre, no tiéne quién le láve, o le alábe: He who has no mother has no body to waſh him or praiſe him. This is only to denote the great tenderneſs of mothers; for no body does ſo praiſe or ſerve children as good mothers do.

MADRECÍLLA, vid. Madrezílla.

MADRESE'LVA, the plant woodbine or honeyſuckle.

MADREZÍLLA, a little mother.

MAGUE'R, Obſ. albeit, altho'.

MAGUE'Y is the tree of wonders, for it yields water, wine, oyl, vinegar, honey, a ſort of muſt like that of new wine boiled, thread and needles, beſides many other things. It is therefore much valued in New Spain, and grows wild, and is alſo cultivated. The leaves of it are broad and coarſe, ending in a ſharp ſtrong point, which ſerves either for a pin, or to ſew with, and this is the needle; and from the leaf they draw out threads, which are its fibres. The body or trunk of the tree being large, when it is young and tender, they cut an hollow in it, to which the ſap or moiſture riſes from the root, and this they drink inſtead of water, being cool and ſweet. This liquor boiled is like wine; letting it ſowre, it ſerves for vinegar; being boiled to a conſiſtence, it is honey; and half-boiled, it is like the muſt above-mention'd, well taſted, and wholſome, and in my opinion better than that which is made of grapes. So that according as they boil it, there come from it ſeveral ſorts of liquors; and the quantity the tree yields is great, as ſeveral quarts every day for ſome time. The wood of this tree is ſpongy, and ſerves to keep fire a long time, like the match uſed by ſoldiers. F. Joſ. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. W. Ind. l. 4. c. 23. p. 254.

MAMACÓNAS, a ſort of heathen nuns, like the Roman Veſtal virgins, that ſerv'd in the ſame nature in Peru, before the conqueſt by the Spaniards.

MAMA'NTE, a ſucking babe. The word obſolete, and ſcarce uſed but in one expreſſion; as,

No quedára mamánte ni piánte, there ſhall not be left ſo much as a chicken, or a ſucking babe. To ſignify, that all living creatures ſhall be deſtroy'd.

MAMANTÓNES, young ſucking lambs or kids that have never graz'd.

MAMA'R, to ſuck. From mamma, a teat.

MAMARRA'CHO, a ſcurvy ugly figure, a baſe piece of painting, an ill made image, a maulkin; alſo a jack-pudding.

MAMELÚCO, a mameluke; they were originally ſlaves, who took up arms, and tyranniz'd in Egypt for many years, chooſing a ſultan among themſelves. Whence the Portugueſes in Brazil gave this name to thoſe that were begot by them on Indian women, who for many years committed the moſt barbarous villanies that ever were heard of, as may be ſeen in del Techo's hiſtory of Paraguay.

MAME'Y, a ſort of fruit in the Weſt Indies, bigger than a large peach, with one or two ſtones in it, and the pulp harder than that of a peach. Some are ſweet, others ſomewhat tart; the rind is hard; they are pleaſant to eat, and make a good preſerve, which looks like quince. They grow in the iſlands; the tree is large, handſome, and bears a good head. Acoſt. hiſt. W. Ind. p. 256.

MAMOEÍRO, a tree in Brazil, of which there is male and female. The male bears no fruit, but only flowers; the female bears fruit, and no flower; but unleſs the male be planted near, ſhe bears not. This female grows about two foot thick and nine in height before it bears, and then the top appears cover'd with fruit, growing cloſe, clinging one to the other, near nine foot in height. This fruit is round, and as big as a ſmall gourd; the pulp of it when ripe is yellowiſh, which the Indians eat to purge them. It has many ſeeds as big as peaſe, black and ſhining; the leaves grow out among the fruit on long ſtalks, and are like thoſe of the plane.

MAMÓN, a milk-ſop, an overgrown ſucking looby; alſo a young ſucking beaſt, as a kid, lamb, &c.

M A N

MAN, is uſed joined with other words for máno, an hand.

MANA', manna, which the Iſraelites fed on in the deſert.

Maná, the kind, eaſy, and medicinal manna found in the province of Uſbech in Perſia, and thence ſent to Ormuz, and all over India. There are five ſorts of it in thoſe parts. One white, ſmall, in grains like comfits, and ſweet as honey; and this, ſome ſay, is a dew that falls on thoſe trees, whence they gather it, and they keep it in glaſs veſſels well ſtopped from the air; others ſay, it is a gum coming from the ſame tree. Another ſort, they ſay, grows on thiſtles, whence they draw it, beating them with ſtaves. It is of a ruddy colour, and of the bigneſs of a coriander-ſeed. This, ſome think to be the fruit, others, the gum of thoſe thiſtles; and the Perſians reckon it better and wholſomer than the other. The third ſort is in bigger pieces, and mix'd with ſome leaves, white, and like the manna of Calabria; this moſt uſed, and deareſt. Another ſort is ſold about India, liquid, in skins and pots, like white honey, but ſoon decays. All theſe purge with eaſe, and without danger. Another ſort in bits, bigger than that of Calabria, and not white, is ſold at Ormuz, and in ſeveral parts of India. This purges more violently, and therefore the common ſort reckon it the better, as alſo becauſe it is cheaper; but this is a compoſition. It is ſo ſafe a medicine, that it is given to children and women with child. Chriſt. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. E. Ind.

MA'NA, is alſo an abbreviation of ermána, ſiſter.

The tree that bears it is large, and thick of boughs, the fruit commonly bigger than a gooſe egg; but in ſome parts of India there are of them that weigh above two pounds. Some of them are green, ſome with a mixture of red, and ſome yellow, but all from the ſame tree. This fruit is very pleaſant to the taſte and ſmell, and much better than the quince. It is eaten ſeveral ways, and all of them good; as alſo preſerv'd, and pickled, opening it, and filling the ſhell with garlick, muſtard, ſalt and oil, and then putting it into vinegar. It is cold and moiſt. Before it is quite ripe this fruit is of a very harſh taſte, but ripe, very ſweet and pleaſant. The kernel in its ſtone, eaten raw, is bitter, but good to kill worms, and againſt the flux; roaſted, it taſtes like an acorn. There are ſome mangos without any ſtone. There is a ſort of wild mangos which are ſuch rank poyſon, that there is no antidote yet known againſt them. Chriſt. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. E. Ind.

MANGONA'DA, a bob, a thruſt with the arm, a flap with a ſleeve.

They ſay, a country-woman having dreſs'd the meat for her husband that was at work, becauſe he ſtay'd later than ordinary, fell to and eat it up. He coming when ſhe had done, and asking her what ſhe meant, ſhe anſwer'd, ſhe thought ſhe had no husband, and eat up the meat. This is apply'd to all that commit great faults, and then make fooliſh excuſes, ſaying, I thought or I did not think, and therefore we ſay, Thought lay a-bed and beſhit himſelf.

Prov. Por mas que me digádes, mi maríde es el paſtór: Say what you will the ſhepherd is my husband. A good woman, wife to a ſhepherd, heard her neighbours talk ill of all ſhepherds, and call'd her, by way of contempt, the ſhepherd's wife, and ſhe not valuing their ill tongues, ſtill anſwer'd, Say what you will the ſhepherd is my husband. This ſhows, that whatſoever ill tongues can ſay, no wife ſhould be aſham'd of her husband, nor no man of his profeſſion, and that nothing thing can divide thoſe whom a faithful love has united.

Prov. Mi marído va a la mar chírlos mírlos a buſcár: My husband goes to ſea to ſeek chírlos mírlos; a fram'd word to ſignify nothing, or what is nothing to the purpoſe. Apply'd to thoſe who live idle, and range about from place to place to bring home nothing but idle ſtories and lies.

Prov. Al marído málo cegállo, con las gallínas de par del gállo: Blind a bad husband with the hens that run with the cock. Hens or pullets ſignify good feeding; and therefore a woman is adviſed, if ſhe has a bad husband, to make ſo much of him, and be ſo kind, that he may ſee no faults, and that will make him good. Or in another ſenſe, If the wife is falſe to her huſband, ſhe is adviſed to be very loving to him, that he may not diſcover her buſineſs.

Prov. Quién no múda marído, no médra veſtído: She that does not change husbands, does not improve in cloaths. A ſaying of women, who having been ill uſed by their firſt husbands, live well with a ſecond. It is alſo uſed by lewd women, who call their gallants husbands, and changing them often, get variety of garments. Apply'd in another ſenſe to thoſe who thrive by removing from one place to another, or leaving an employment for a better.

Prov. Prometén marído, y quítan veſtído: They promiſe an husband, and take away cloaths. A maid was taken into ſervice upon promiſe to marry her after ſuch a term as was agreed on, which, when expired, inſtead of finding her an husband, they took away ſome of the cloaths they had given her; whereupon ſhe utters this proverb, which is apply'd to all thoſe who promiſe mighty favours, and at the ſame time take ſomething from thoſe they were to aſſiſt.

Prov. Marído tras del lar, mal de hijár: An husband by the fire-ſide is as bad as a pain in the ſide. That is, It is a great affliction to a wife to ſee her husband ſitting in the chimney-corner, when he ſhould be abroad following his buſineſs, and providing for his family.

Prov. Aſſí es el marído ſin hécho, cómo cáſa ſin técho: An husband without action is like an houſe without a roof. By action is meant the conjugal duty, or paying the marriage debt; for if that be not perform'd, the end of matrimony fails, even as an houſe is of no uſe that has no roof.

Prov. Al tu marído o eſpóſo muéſtrate, mas no del tódo: Show your ſelf to your husband or ſpouſe, but not altogether. That is, be not coy to your husband, or too preciſe, but at the ſame time do not forget modeſty.

Prov. Comé marído pan y cebol.a, que porqué ſóys ruýn no os póngo ólla: Huſband, eat bread and onion; for I don't hang on the pot, becauſe you are a baſe fellow. This, they ſay, a country woman uſed to ſay to her husband, providing no better for him to eat, becauſe he did not anſwer her expectation. And in theſe terms an husband upbrai.s his wife, when he finds ſhe does not take care to have his meat dreſs'd, whilſt he is abroad about his buſineſs.

Prov. Andándo y hablándo marído a la hórca: Walking and talking on, husband, to the gallows. They ſay, a woman walking by her husband as he was going to the gallows to be hang'd, he talk'd to her by the way, and ſometimes ſtood to inculcate ſomething to her. The good woman, who had a mind to be rid of him, every time he ſtopp'd, uſed the words of this proverb, meaning, that he might talk and walk on to the gallows. It is applied to any that wiſh another dead, or haſten him on to his ruin.

Prov. Al marído ſírvelo como a ſeñór, y guárdate del cómo de un traydór: Serve your husband as your lord, and be as cautious of him as you would be of a traytor. That is, honour and obey your husband as you are enjoyn'd in matrimony, and at the ſame time be as cautious of offending him, as if he were the moſt dangerous traytor.

Prov. A la que ſu marído en-cornúda, Señór, y tu le ayúda: Lord, do you help her that cuckolds her husband. It does not mean, that God ſhould help her in her wickedneſs, but that God would protect her life, which is in ſuch imminent danger; it being a thing too frequent in Spain for huſbands to kill their wives when they take them in adultery.

Prov. El marído ántes con un ójo, que con un híjo: An husband rather with one eye, than with a ſon. It is advice to women rather to chooſe an husband that has but one eye, than the compleateſt man that has a ſon already.

Prov. Eſperándo marído cavalléro, dánme las tétas abáxo del pécho: Waiting for a gentleman for an husband, my breaſts hang below my ſtomach. The complaint of a woman, who looking for an husband above her, was grown old, ſignified by her breaſts hanging down. A misfortune we ſee often enough among thoſe who ſoar too high, and becauſe they cannot get what is above them, pretend they will not marry. It is apply'd to all that ſlip the time of providing for themſelves according to their rank, by aſpiring to thoſe things that are above them.

Prov. La que mal marído tiéne en el tocádo ſe le paréce: She that has an ill husband ſhows it in her dreſs. Becauſe generally women that have ill huſbands live diſcontented, and do not care to take the pains to dreſs themſelves.

Prov. Marído cornúdo ſódes. Mejór es que inchár óires: Husband, you are a cuckold. It is better than filling of skins. A poor fellow that dreſs'd hog-skins to carry wine in, having an handſome wife, neglected his trade, and ſhe got their living as ſhe could, which he conſented to; whereupon ſhe took the freedom to tell him he was a cuckold, and he anſwers, It is better be a cuckold, and live at eaſe, than to work at ſuch a poor trade. Applied to ſuch men as value not honour or conſcience, ſo they live idly.

Prov. Marído y mugér, compánia ſin bién: Husband and wife unhappy company. This, they ſay, is ſo if they have no children nor ſervants; becauſe children are the end of matrimony, and if they have no ſervants they muſt be forced to ſerve themſelves, which ſometimes cauſes uneaſineſs. But proverbs are not always infallible; for many live happier without ſervants than ſome that have many, and children do not always prove a bleſſing.

Prov. Llevád vos marído la artéſa, &c. Vid. Artéſa.

Prov. He aquí marido cómo nos perdémos, tu pára póco, y yó pára méntos: Thus it is we are ruin'd, husband, becauſe you are good for little, and I for leſs. Said when two people meet who are fit for no buſineſs, and all things go to rack between them.

MA'YZ, Indian wheat to make bread of, is the only ſort of grain found in the Weſt-Indies: it grows on a ſtrong reed, with large grains, and ſometimes two ears on a reed, on one of which 700 grains of wheat have been told. They ſow it grain by grain, and not ſcattering, as we do our wheat, and it requires a hot and moiſt ſoil. There are two ſorts of it, one large and ſubſtantial, the other ſmall and dry, which they call moroche. The leaves of it and the reed are very good food for cattle, green; and dry, it ſerves as well as ſtraw. The grain is better for beaſts than barley, but they muſt drink before they eat it; for if they drink after, it ſwells, and gives them the gripes. The Indians eat it hot boiled, and call it mote, and ſometimes toaſted. There is a ſort of it large and round, which the Spaniards eat toaſted; they alſo grind it, and make cakes, which they eat hot, and theſe in ſome places they call arepas; they alſo make bread to keep, and ſweet cakes of it. The indians make drink of it, as we do of barley; this they call in Peru, açúa, and in moſt other parts chicha, which is very ſtrong, and makes them drunk, for which reaſon it is prohibited. They have alſo a way of extracting an oil from it, which is good, and ſerves inſtead of butter, or oil of olives. Joſ. da Acoſt. nat. hiſt. of the Weſt Indies, l. 4. c. 16. p. 236.

Medína, the name of several towns in Spain, signifying in Arabick a chief city or metropolis.

Medína Cé'li, a town in the kingdom of Old Castile in Spain, 4 leagues from Siguénça, seated on a high hill, not far from the source of the river Xalon, it has strong antient walls, and a castle of the same sort; as also a noble palace for its dukes; its territory abounds in game, all sorts of cattle, fowl and corn. Its inhabitants are not above 300, under one collegiate parish with a miter'd abbot. It was formerly called Eccleſta, Augustobriga, Mediolum, and Secontia Vetus. It stands on a hill near the river Xalon, 31 leagues north east of Madrid, and 34 south-west from Zaragoza. King Henry the second of Castile made it an earldom and a dukedom by Ferdinand and Isabel, king and queen of Castile and Aragon. Both these titles came successively to the most illustrious family of la Cerda, in whom the dukedom still continues. These dukes are descended from Ferdinand, son and rightful heir to Alonso the Xth, king of Castile, but unjustly put by his right by his uncle Sancho the IVth, who usurp'd the crown and left it to his heirs. Prince Ferdinand took the name of la Cerda from some bristly hair he had on his breast, cerdas in Spanish signifying bristles. Elizabeth de la Cerda, heiress of this noble family, was marry'd to Mosen Bernard, earl of Bearne and Faux, from whom the present dukes of Medinaceli are descended. His estate is suitable to his nobility, being valu'd at near 80,000 pounds per annum; his arms quarterly, the first and fourth party per pale of Castile and Leon, the second and third, of France.

Medína de las Tórres, a small town in the kingdom of New Castile in Spain, of which I can no where find any further account.

Medína del Ca'mpo, a town in the kingdom of Castile in Spain, eight leagues from Valladolid, on the banks of the river Zapardiel, formerly the place of residence of some kings, seated in a muddy soil, and subject to clouds and fogs, which is the reason they say of it, It has neither sky nor ground; yet its territory is fruitful. Formerly it contain'd 14000 inhabitants, at present about 1800 houses, 14 parishes, 9 monasteries of friars, 6 of nuns, and 4 hospitals.

Medína del Poma'r, a small town in Old Castile in Spain, on the mountains of Burgos.

Medína Sidónia, a town in Andaluzia in Spain, formerly called Assindum and Assidonia, seated on a hill 9 miles east of Cadiz, and 25 west of Malaga. King John II. of Castile erected it into a dukedom in the year 1445, conferring that title on D. John Alonso de Guzman III. earl of Niebla, in whose issue it continues to this time. The family of Guzman is of antient and great nobility. Some will have it to be descended from Gundemarus, king of the Goths, other from Gurban, king of Britany in France; and indeed its antiquity is singular; but this we have for certain, that it descends lineally from the famous Alonso Perez de Guzman, who about the year 1292, defended Tarifa with the utmost bravery against the Moors; who because he would not surrender, murder'd his son before his face, for which he had the surname of el Bueno, or the good given him, which his issue still keep up. His grandson was created earl of Niebla by king Henry II. of Castile, and the earl's grandson, duke of Medina Sidonia, by king John II. Their estate is suitable to their nobility, being valu'd at 60000 pounds per annum; their arms, parti per saltier, in chief and base azure, a kettle checkie, Or, and sanguine; with three snakes sticking out on each side the handle; the dexter and sinister sides argent, with five black spots of ermin; the whole within an orle of Castile and Leon. The situation of the town is on a steep hill, very strong by nature; but the territory about it is for the most part rich pasture. The inhabitants amount to about 1500, 2 parishes, 4 monasteries of friars, and 1 of nuns.

Medína de Río se'co, a city in the kingdom of Leon in Spain, seated in a large plain, hemm'd in with mountains. It is a rich and well serv'd city. The fields about it are very rich pasture, besides corn fields and vineyards. Its inhabitants are above 2000, many of quality. There are in it three parishes, 3 monasteries of friars, 2 of nuns, 3 great hospitals, and 16 chapels. A good castle commands it. King Philip IV. made it a city an. 1632. The antient name of it was Forum Egurrorum, and since Methymna Sicca. It is a dukedom in the noble family of Henriquez. Of which see more verb. Almiránte de Castilla.

Muda'r, to change. Lat. mutare.

Mudárſe, to remove houſe.

Múdas, vid. Múda.

Mudece'r, vid. Enmudecér.

Mude'jares, or Mudéxares, Moors that were ſubject to the Chriſtians, and liv'd among them, by which means they came to be converted, and ſtill kept their name. In Barbary the infidels give this name to the Moors that went over from the kingdom of Granada and their off-ſpring. In the kingdom of Fez they call the ſame people Elches.

Mudín, an old meaſure containing about a quarter of a peck.

Múdo, dumb. Lat. mutus.

MUE

Mue'ble, moveable.

Mue'bles, goods, moveables.

Prov. Al muéble ſin raíz, préſto ſe le quiébra la cerviz: A moveable without a root ſoon breaks its neck. That is, money or goods without an eſtate real, or ſome way to improve them, are not ſecure or laſting.

Mue'ca, a ſcoff.

Mue'la, a millſtone, a grindſtone.

Mue'la, one of the teeth called the grinders. For in Spaniſh the teeth are diſtinguiſhed by ſeveral names, theſe grinders called muélas, as is ſaid. The four foremoſt above and below they call diéntes, or teeth, from the Latin dentes; and the four that part theſe from the grinders, that is, one on each ſide in the upper and lower jaw, colmíllos, that is, tuſks.

Muéla córdal, an eye-tooth.

Muéla de máno, an hand-mill.

Muélas de gállo, cocks grinders. So they call a man that has no teeth.

Prov. A quién duéle la muéla, que la éche fuéra; Let him that has the tooth-ach pull it out. That is, let every man bear the inconveniencies which are for his own advantage.

Prov. Entre dos muélas molares, or cordáles, nínca métas tus pulgáres: Never put your thumbs betwixt two grinders.

Prov. Pedír muélas al gállo: To ask the cock for teeth. Like milking a bull.

Mue'le, Muélo, vid. Molér.

Mue'lle, Adject. ſoft. Lat. mollis.

Mue'lle, a mole built in the ſea to make an harbour, or defend it from being choak'd up by the ſand, or to ſecure it from any particular wind. Lat. moles.

Muélle is alſo that little iron in a lock which falls upon the bolt, and holds it faſt, either ſhut or open, but riſes when the key turns, to let the bolt ſlip forwards or backwards. It is called the ketch of the ſpring.

Muellejónes, ſwellings in an horſe's mouth, which hinder his eating.

Muelleme'nte, ſoftly.

Mue'lo, vid. Molér.

Mue'lo, Subſt. an heap of corn.

Mue'rdago, a green ſhrub growing on apple-trees, crab-trees, &c. called miſletoe.

Mue'rde, Muérdo, vid. Mordér.

Mue're, Muéro; vid. Morír.

Mue'rgo, a ſhell-fiſh about the length of a man's finger, looking like the top of a pocket inkhorn.

Mue'rmo, a cold in any beaſt, which makes them breathe hard and ſnort; the ſnuffling or ſnorting of a dog.

Muermóso, troubled with a cold, ſnuffling, or ſnorting.

Mue'rte, death. Lat. mors.

Prov. Muérte de ſuégra dolór de códo, que duéle múcho y dúra póco: The death of a mother-in-law, that is, the wife's or the husband's mother, is like the pain of an elbow, which is very ſharp, and laſts little. Becauſe in Spain they have no good conceit of thoſe mothers by affinity, and therefore they ſay it looks like a great pain, but is ſoon over.

Prov. A la muérte de mi maríd̃o, póca céra y múcho pavílo: At my husband's death, little wax and much ſnuff. Alluding to the wax-lights they carry at funerals. The ſaying of a woman that would be rid of her husband at the cheapeſt rate, allowing the worſt of every thing for his funeral.

Prov. Por muérte de híjos no ſe deſpára la cáſa: The houſe is not unfurniſh'd for the death of children. Becauſe whilſt the father and mother live, they commonly keep houſe, tho' children die.

Prov. A la muérte no áy cósa fuérte: Nothing is ſtrong againſt death. Or, there is no remedy againſt death.

Prov. Quién da lo que tiéne ántes de la muérte, meréce que le den con un máço en la frénte: He who gives away what he has before death, deſerves to be knock'd on the head with a mallet. That is, he is not fit to live, ſince we ſee ſo many who have come to want by giving what they had to their own children, who have barbarouſly forſaken them.

Prov. Guáy de la muérte, que no tóma preſénte: Alaſs for death, which takes no preſent. That is, will not be bribed.

Prov. Mas válе dexár en la muérte al enemígo, que pedír en la vída al amígo: It is better at one's death to leave to an enemy, than in one's life to ask of a friend.

Prov. En la muérte del áſno no piérde náda el lóbo: The wolf is no loſer by the aſs's death. Becauſe commonly the wolves eat him. Sharpers are commonly the better for the death of fooliſh miſers, who have labour'd hard all their life-time to acquire wealth.

Mue'rto, dead. Lat. mortuus.

Prov. Quién con muértos ſe ſuéña con vívos ſe hálla: He who dreams of the dead, finds himſelf among the living. To ſignify, that there is no minding dreams, for when a man awakes he finds nothing of them.

Mue'sca, a notch, a dent, a ſcotch in any thing. Arab.

Mue'so, the bit that is put into the horſe's mouth.

Mue'stra, a ſhow, or ſhowing of a thing, a muſter of ſoldiers, a pattern of a thing, a rough draught of a thing; alſo a watch.

Pérro de muéſtra, a blood-hound; alſo a ſetting-dog, becauſe they both ſhow what is lookt for.

Mue'stre, Muéſtro; vid. Moſtrár.

MUE'VE, Muévo; vid. Movér.

MUE'VEDO, a clowniſh country word for a woman's miſcarrying.

M U F

MÚFLA, a concave thing like half a bowl, which ſerves to cover the refiner's furnace, having an hollow tunnel or neck to it, through which the crucibles are put down into the furnace to eſſay ſilver or gold.

MUFLÍR, in cant, to eat.

M U G

MUGE'R, a woman. Lat. mulier.

Mugér de ſu cáſa, a good houſewife.

Mugér de güſto, a lady of pleaſure.

Mugér de púnto, a woman that ſtands upon her honour.

Tomár la mugér en cuéros, to take a woman naked. We ſay, to take her in her ſmock.

Prov. A la mugér baylár, y al áſno rebuznár, el diáblo ſe lo devió de moſtrár: It was ſurely the devil taught woman to dance, and the aſs to bray. Becauſe the conſequences of dancing are often ſo ſcandalous, and an aſs's braying ſo odious.

Prov. De tu mugér y de tu amígo expérto, no creas ſinó lo que ſupiéres de ciérto: Do not believe any thing of your wife, and of a try'd friend, but what you are ſure of. Good advice not to credit idle reports, or vile whiſperers, who endeavour to ſow diſcord between friends and married people.

Prov. A la mugér cáſta, Dios le báſta: God is ſufficient for a chaſte woman. Other women put their confidence in their friends, or their wealth, or other worldly dependances, but a chaſte virtuous woman may put her truſt in God, who will provide for and reward her. An encouragement to good women, who are deſtitute of wordly helps.

Prov. Al que tiéne mugér hermósa, o caſtillo en frontéra, o viña en carréra, nunca le fálta guérra: He that has a beautiful wife, or a caſtle on the frontiers, or a vineyard on the road, is never without war. That is, has always quarrels. The beautiful wife the proverb ſuppoſes will be ſought after by others, which will make her husband jealous, and then quarrels enſue: A caſtle on frontiers is always expoſed to the enemy; and a vineyard by the highway is ſubject to be pull'd by all that paſs, which the owner cannot bear patiently.

Prov. A la mugér mála póco le aprovécha guárda: It is to little purpoſe to watch a wicked woman. This proverb ſerves all men: For if they have good wives, there is no need of watching them; and if they are bad, the devil will inſtruct them how to be too hard for their husbands.

Prov. Aunqué con tu mugér téngas barájas, no métas en tu caſa pájas: Tho' you quarrel with your wife, do not bring ſtraw unto your houſe. That is, do not keep ſervants that carry tales backwards and forwards, or admit any others to be any ways concerned between you; for that is like bringing ſtraw into the houſe, which will ſoon take fire, and raiſe a conflagration that cannot be quenched.

Pro. Al que yó bién quiéra, la mugér ſe le muéra, la múla que no la buéna: The man that I love may his wife dye, the bad one, but not the good one. A friendly wiſh that a man may be rid of an ill wife, ſince there is no way but death to part them.

Prov. Con la mugér y el dinéro, no te búrles compañéro: Do not jeſt with a wife and money. It does not mean that a man ſhould not be eaſy with his wife, ſo as to jeſt with her; but that he ſhould not, as ſome do, utter lewd jeſts of her abroad, which is below a man of honour, and expoſe her to contempt: And in another ſenſe, that none ſhould preſume to jeſt upon another man's wife; but that a wife and money ought both to be chearily kept; for, as we ſay, it is ill jeſting with edg'd tools.

Prov. A la mugér y a la gallína tuércele el cuéllo, y dárte ha la vída: Wring your wife's and your fowl's neck, and they will give you life. That is, wring the neck of your fowl, which eaten, is good nouriſhment; and correct your wife if ſhe deſerves it, which will make you eaſy, and that will give you life; for good nouriſhment and living eaſy make a man live long.

Prov. A la mugér y a la picáça, lo que viéres en la pláça: To a woman and a magpye, what you ſee in the market-place. That is, tell women and magpies nothing but what is publick, or may be ſo, and do not entruſt them with any ſecrets, leſt they reveal them.

Prov. A quién tiéne mála mugér ningún bién le puéde venír, que bién ſe puéda dezír: He that has a bad wife can have no good befall him that can be call'd good. Becauſe his misfortune is ſo great in having an ill wife, that no happineſs can any way mitigate it, but his greateſt proſperity is drowned under his affliction. And therefore follows the ſame proverb reverſed.

Prov. A quién tiéne buéna mugér, ningún mal le puéde venír, que no ſéa de ſuſrír: He that has a good wife can have no ill befall him but what is tolerable. Becauſe a good wife alleviates all ſorrows, and helps a man to bear a part of them.

Prov. A la mugér ventanéra, tuércele el cuéllo, ſi la quiéres buéna: Wring a woman's neck that loves gazing at the windows, if you would make her good for any thing. Theſe proverbs are not to be taken in the literal ſenſe; for it is not here meant that a woman ſhould be murdered for looking out of a window, but that ſhe ſhould be corrected and reproved, and broke of it, when ſhe is always gadding and gazing abroad, ſo as to neglect her houſhold affairs, or give ſcandal.

Prov. El que no tiéne mugér, cada día la máta, mas el que la tiéne, bién ſe la guárda: He that has no wife kills her every day, but he that has, takes good care of her. We ſee daily men very fierce before they are married, and threaten how they will rule and command their wives, who, when they have them, commonly prove the tameſt husbands. We ſay not unlike it, Maids children and batchelors wives are well governed.

Prov. A la mugér bráva dálle la ſóga lárga: Give an unruly woman much rope. That is, do not let her go, but give her time to play, as you do with a trout, and then take her up. We ſay, Give her rope enough, and ſhe'll hang her ſelf. Some take this rope in another ſenſe, and ſay, that a new-married woman fell a ſcolding ſo violently, that her husband was for the preſent forced to get out of the houſe till the ſtorm was over. When he came home, the wife being cool, begged his pardon, alledging it was in her nature, and ſhe could not forbear ſcolding, but her paſſion was ſoon over. Then he took a good rope's end, and gave her plentiful correction, which done, he begg'd her pardon, pleading it was his unhappy temper ſo to do, but when it was over he ſhould be as tame as an aſs. This, ſome ſay, is giving a wife rope enough.

Prov. A la mugér caſada no le des de la bárba: Do not nod your head to a married woman. That is, do not make private ſigns and tokens to allure her; for when you leaſt think of it, her husband may be in ſight, and revenge the wrong that threatens him.

Prov. La mugér en cáſa, y la piérna quebráda: A woman at home, and her leg leg broken. That is, women ought to keep at home as if their legs were broken, and not to be continually gadding; for nothing is more ſcandalous, than to ſee a woman always ranging the ſtreets.

Prov. La mugér quinzéna, y el hombre de tréynta: The woman at fifteen, the man at thirty. That is, they ſhould marry at thoſe years, and this not on account of the common miſtaken notion, that Spaniſh women will not bear children if they marry late, for then the husbands ought to marry younger, for it is certain they can get children ſooner. But the reaſon is, becauſe when the wife is ſo young, the huſband may mould her to his mind, and teach her to comply with him, and ſubmit to his will, which is not ſo well done when women are more in years; and the man at thirty is grown more ſtay'd, riper in judgment, and fitter to rule his family.

Prov. La mugér y la ſálſa a la máno de la lança: The wife and the ſauce on the hand of the lance. That is, place them on your right hand, which is the hand that uſes the lance; the wife, to give her due honour; and the ſauce, that it may be readier for uſe.

Prov. La priméra mugér eſcóba, y la ſegúnda ſeñora: The firſt wife a broom, (that is, a drudge) and the ſecond a lady. This proverb ſignifies, that for the moſt part he who uſes his firſt wife ill, and lords it over her too much, meets with a ſecond wife of an high ſpirit, who plays the lady, and keeps him as humble as he did the firſt wife.

Prov. La mugér del hidálgo, póca haziénda y gran trençádo: A poor gentleman's wife has but a little eſtate, and a great roll of hair. That is, poor gentry, tho' they want many conveniences of life, and even cloaths, ſtill endeavour to wear ſomething that may diſtinguiſh them from the common ſort, which in Spain uſed formerly to be a great head of hair braided.

Prov. La mugér del ciégo, pára quién ſe aféyta? For whom does the blind man's wife paint or dreſs her ſelf up? It cannot be for him who cannot ſee her ornaments; and therefore the queſtion is very proper, and may ſerve not only in the caſe of a blind man, but in an husband's abſence, and in other caſes allegorically.

Prov. La mugér del viéjo relúmbra cómo eſpéjo: The old man's wife ſhines like a looking-glaſs. That is, old mens young wives are generally paſſionately beloved by them, who take all the care in the world to pleaſe and pamper them, and therefore they thrive, living contented, and ſhine with gay cloaths and ornaments. This is the true ſenſe; but ſome enemies to women will have it to denote that old mens young wives dreſs themſelves as fine as they can to pleaſe young men.

Prov. La mugér del eſcudéro, gránde la bólſa, y póco el dinéro: The poor ſquire's wife has a great purſe, and little money in it. This is applicable to all things that make much ſhow and are of little value; and not unlike our ſaying, like ſhearing of hogs, a great cry, and little wool.

Prov. La mugér del viñadéro buén otóño, y mal invierno: The keeper of a vineyard's wife has a good autumn and a bad winter. There are men hir'd in Spain to look to the vineyards, which laſts only during the autumn till the vintage, and theſe are poor fellows, who during that time can maintain their wives with what is allow'd them, and a few grapes they carry home; but when winter comes they are diſcharged, and then both man and wife in winter muſt ſhift for another livelihood.

Prov. La mugér del paſtór a la nóche ſe compón: The ſhepherd's wife dreſſes her ſelf at night. Becauſe her huſband is abroad all the day with his flock, and comes home at night, when his wife dreſſes her ſelf to receive him.

Prov. La mugér artéra el marído por delantéra: A cunning woman puts her husband before. That is, whenever ſhe has a mind to refuſe any thing, ſhe pleads her husband will be angry, and ſo ſtill alledging obedience to her huſband, can offend no body with her refuſal.

Prov. La mugér caſáda en el mónte es alvergáda: A married woman finds entertainment on a mountain. That is, a virtuous good woman is ſafe, tho' ſhe be expoſed on a mountain; for even there her virtue will protect her, as if ſhe were in the midſt of a city.

Prov. La mugér compuéſta a ſu marído quíta de puérta agéna: A wife that is dreſs'd draws her husband from another body's door. That is, when a woman keeps her ſelf clean, and decently dreſs'd, her husband does not run after other women, but is pleaſed with her. Not like ſome ſluts, who think it good houſewifery to be naſty, and when reproved for it, ſay they are married, as if there were no regard to be had to an husband when married; which is the reaſon that ſome men, loathing the naſtineſs they always ſee at home, cannot endure their houſe.

Prov. El que no tiéne mugér múchos ojós ha meneſtér: He who has no wife has need of many eyes. Becauſe he who has a wife has one he can confide in to look to all his houſhold affairs, and take care he be not cheated by ſervants or others; whereas he who has no wife, has all the care and trouble upon himſelf.

Prov. La mugér maridáda no víva deſcuidáda: The married woman muſt not lead a careleſs life. It is her buſineſs to be watchful not only over her husband's honour, but over all his houſhold affairs, and to take care that he does not ſuffer through her negligence.

Prov. La mugér ſéa yguál, o menór, ſi quiéres ſer ſeñór: Your wife muſt be your equal, or inferior, if you deſign to be maſter. It is advice to men to marry their equals, or elſe ſomething below their degree, rather than above; becauſe a woman who by birth is much above her husband, will not eaſily ſubmit to him, but rather endeavour to keep him under as her inferior.

Prov. La mugér buéna coróna es del marído: A good wife is her husband's crown. That is, a good woman crowns all her husband's happineſs. It is taken out of ſcripture, Prov. xii.

Prov. Muéſtrame tu mugér, dezírte he que marído tiéne: Show me your wife, and I'll tell you what an huſband ſhe has. It is eaſy to gueſs by a woman's garb, countenance, and behaviour, how her husband uſes her.

Prov. Mugér de cínco ſuéldos, marído de dos meájas: A wife of five ſuéldos, an husband of two meájas. A ſuéldo was an antient piece of money worth 18 maravedi's; a meája was the ſmalleſt piece of money in Spain: Therefore when they ſee the wife very fine, and the husband but poorly clad, they uſe this proverb. As if we ſhould ſay, a wife of five pounds, and a twopenny husband.

Prov. Mugér no te las cuénto, mas dóze morcíllas háze un puérco: Wife, I don't reckon them to you, but an hog makes 12 puddings. It is the cuſtom of Spain to make ſo many, neither more or leſs, when they kill an hog: So this is telling a woman that cannot give a good account of what ſhe is entruſted with, that the husband knows what there ought to be, tho' he will not ſtand to call her to an account.

Prov. Mugér caſéra, el marído ſe le muéra: The woman that is a good houſe-keeper, may her husband die. This is not a prayer that a good woman ſhould loſe her husband, but only ſhows, that ſhe is better to live in caſe the misfortune ſhould befal her, than a gadding idle woman, who, if her husband dies, knows not how to do any thing.

Prov. Ni mugér de ótro, ni coz de pótro: Neither another man's wife, nor the kick of a colt. That is, it is as bad to have to do with another man's wife, as to receive a kick of a colt; and the danger is as great in following a married woman, as in following a colt that will kick.

Prov. No es bráva la mugér que cábe en cáſa: She is not an unruly wife, if the houſe holds her. A man complained to a friend, that his wife was untoward and unruly; the friend inquiring into the matter, found the woman lived very retired, and only reproved her husband for neglecting his buſineſs; whereupon he ſaid to the man the words of this proverb, to ſignify that ſhe was no untoward, turbulent wife, who minded her buſineſs, and only chid him becauſe he did not.

Prov. No áy mugér hermóſa el día de la bóda: No woman is beautiful on the wedding-day. The meaning of it is, that all the women at a wedding are ſo adorned with rich cloaths, painted and patch'd, that no man can tell what natural perfections they have; and therefore none can be call'd a beauty, but ſhe that appears ſo without all thoſe helps.

Prov. Pára tu mugér empreñár no déves a otro buſcár: You muſt not look for another to get your wife with child. This is plain doctrine enough; but it ſignifies that men muſt not, as they ſay ſome do, take advice how to get their wives with child, or conſult doctors or conjurers for that which is only in themſelves. But it is apply'd in any other caſe, to inform a man that he muſt mind his own buſineſs, and not truſt to others.

Prov. La mugér y la viña el hómbre la háze garrída: The man makes the wife and vineyard fine. The vineyard muſt always be carefully prun'd and look'd after, or elſe it will become like a wilderneſs, all buſhes; and ſo the wife muſt be cheriſh'd and taken care of by the husband, which will make her gay and pleaſant, and conſequently handſome and more taking.

Prov. Quién quiſiére mugér hermóſa el ſabádo la eſcója: He that will have a beautiful wife muſt chooſe her on a Saturday. Becauſe on Saturdays they are generally undreſs'd, and if they then appear handſome, no doubt but they will be ſo much more when ſet off to the beſt advantage.

Prov. Quién mala mugér cóbra, ſiérvo ſe tórna: He who gets a bad wife, becomes a ſlave. That is, lives in ſlavery, trouble, confuſion, and diſorder. Others ſay, Ciervo ſe tórna, he becomes a ſtag, if ſhe cuckolds him. The words are the ſame in ſpeaking, and only vary one letter in writing.

Prov. La mugér caſéra núnca fálta de parléra: The woman that is a great houſe-keeper never fails of being talkative. That is, women who value themſelves upon their great houſwifry, are always apt to prate more than others deſire to hear; for there is no body in this world without ſome fault; and commonly thoſe that have this good quality never ceaſe tormenting every body with their abilities; ſo that very often a man had better have a woman that can do nothing, than endure the plague of a wife that is always talking of her houſwifry.

Prov. A la mugér y a la múla por el píco la hermoſúra: A woman and a mule muſt have their beauty put in at their mouths. That is, nothing contributes more to make them beautiful than good keeping: For as no rich furniture will make a poor horſe or mule handſome, ſo no cloaths, painting, or patching will make a woman beautiful; but good feeding makes her fair and comely, and puts better colour into her cheeks than all the Portugueze diſhes or Spaniſh wool.

Prov. A la mugér primeríza ántes ſe le paréce la preñéz en el pécho, que en la harríga: The woman that is with child the firſt time, ſhews it in her breaſts before her belly. Becauſe their breaſts are apt to riſe and ſwell before their belly grows big.

Prov. A la mugér lóca mas le agráda el pandéro que la tóca: A mad woman is better pleaſed with a pandero than with her head-cloaths. A pandero is a ſcurvy inſtrument in Spain, uſed by the meaner ſort, being only two pieces of parchment ſtretch'd on an hoop with horſe-bells between, which they hold in one hand, and beat with the other, to make an hideous noiſe to dance to. The proverb ſignifies, that mad women had rather be dancing and ranting than minding their buſineſs. And this is apply'd to any that neglect their duty for their pleaſure.

Prov. A la mugér cáſta pobréza le háze hazér feéza: Poverty oblíges a chaſte woman to do a ſhameful thing. Want has ſuch a force, that it overcomes all things; and therefore no wonder if it ſometimes prevails on women, otherwiſe chaſte, to expoſe themſelves for the neceſſary ſupports of life.

Prov. Compuéſta no áy mugér féa: When dreſs'd, no woman is ugly. This only means, that fine feathers make fine birds; and perhaps it ſignifies, that all women fancy themſelves handſom when dreſs'd, or at leaſt that ſomebody likes them then. Some faces are ſo bad, that all the dreſſing in the world can never make them tolerable, but only virtue, which is the beſt of ornaments.

Prov. En el andár y en el bevér ſe conóce la mugér: A woman is known by her going and drinking. That is, you may gueſs at a woman by her going, viz. by her going much or little: If ſhe is given to gadding and rambling, and to drinking, you may be ſure ſhe is good for nothing; but if ſhe loves home, and is a friend to ſobriety, they are very good tokens.

Prov. La mugér que póco véla, tárde háze luénga téla: The woman that watches little is a long time making a long web. This is apply'd to all perſons who would compaſs great matters with little labour or application.

Prov. La mugér mála, cauta, y no infamáda: An ill woman muſt be cautious, and ſhe'll not be infamous. That is, if women that will be bad would but be cautious of expoſing themſelves too openly, they might at leaſt ſave themſelves the infamy of a bad name, and would do leſs harm, in not giving ſo much ſcandal to others.

Prov. La mugér y la gallína por andár ſe piérde aýna: The woman and the hen are loſt by gadding. An hen when it once ſtrays from home, is ſoon loſt; and ſo a woman, when ſhe gives her ſelf to much gadding and company, ſeldom fails of being loſt in her reputation; for few have fortitude enough to withſtand the temptations they run themſelves into.

Prov. La mugér lóca por la liſta cómpra la tóca: An hair-brain'd woman buys the head-cloths by the liſt, that is, By the lace, or little ornament about them, without minding whether they are good or bad. The ſame may be ſaid of all who ſuffer themſelves to be impos'd upon in the main, by only regarding frivolous Additions, as he who buys an ill houſe for the ſake of an handſom front, a faulty garment for a little ſittle embroidery, an ill book for its good binding, or takes a bad wife for a good portion.

Prov. La mugér algaréra núnca háze larga téla: A ſcolding or a prating woman never makes a long web, that is, ſuch ſort of women are never at leiſure to mind their buſineſs, their tongues take up all their time, and the work is laid aſide to prate.

Prov. La mugér placéra díze de tódos, y tódos délla: The woman that haunts the market, has ſomething to ſay of every body, and every body of her, which is no more, than that a woman, who is always abroad, is ever railing at her neighbours, and finding faults, and conſequently they have all enough to ſay of her.

Prov. La mugér que cría, ni hárta ni límpia: A woman that ſuckles is neither ſatisfy'd nor clean. Nurſes are apt to have good ſtomachs, and are often hungry, beſides they cannot be well dreſs'd, and are always cleaning the children, which makes them not very clean themſelves.

Prov. De mála mugér te guárda, y de la buéna no fíes náda: Take heed of an ill woman, and truſt a good one with nothing. This is a general advice to be cautious of women, to have nothing to do with the bad ones, and not confide too much in good ones.

Prov. La mugér, y el Fráyle mal parecén en la cálle: Women and friars look ill in the ſtreet, that is, they ought not to be ſeen there any more than is neceſſary; they ought to live retir'd.

Prov. La mugér viéja, ſi no ſírve de ólla, ſírve de cobertéra: An old woman, if ſhe does not ſerve for a Pot, ſerves for a pot-lid, that is, if a woman be too old to be lewd, ſhe will ſerve to be a bawd.

Prov. La mugér hermóſa, o lóca, o preſumptuóſa: A beautiful woman is either mad or haughty. This needs little expounding; it is but too natural for women to be proud and conceited of a little beauty, and very often their pride to ſwell to ſuch a degree, that makes them mad.

Prov. La mugér y el vidrío ſiémpre eſtán en peligro: A woman and a glaſs are always in danger, the glaſs oft being broken, and the woman oft being deluded by the falſe oaths and promiſes of men.

Prov. La mugér, y el víno ſácan al hómbre de tíno: Women and wine put man out of his wits. Little need be ſaid of this, where we daily ſee the effects of drunkenneſs, and how many men commit the greateſt of follies and extravagances on the account of women.

NIÑE'RO, one that is fond of children.

NIÑE'TA, a little girl, or the ſight of the eye.

NIÑE'Z, infancy, childhood.

NIÑO, an infant, a male child. From the Hebrew nin, a ſon.

Niño de la piédra, a foundling, a child that has been expoſed by its parents, ſo called, becauſe in the cathedral church of Toledo, there is a ſort of a large half pillar of ſtone, on which ſuch children are generally left, and there is an hoſpital to take care of them.

Prov. Ni de niño te ayúda, ni cáſes con viúda: Do not ſeek the aſſiſtance of a child, nor marry a widow. Becauſe the help or aſſiſtance of a child avails little, and is rather an hindrance; and a widow is not ſo governable as a young maid.

Prov. Al niño ſu mádre caſtíguelo limpielo y hartélo: Let the mother puniſh, clean, and fill the belly of her child. That is, the mother had better look to the child than the nurſe, puniſh its faults, take care of its cleanlineſs, and ſee it be well fed; and ſhe is to take care to correct, and ſee it wants for nothing.

Prov. Dízen los níños, en el ſolejár, lo que óyen a ſus pádres en el hogár: The children ſay in the ſun what they heard from their parents by the fire ſide. A warning to parents how they talk of things that ſhould not be known, before their children; becauſe they have memory to remember, and want diſcretion to keep counſel.

Prov. E'ſſe niño me alába, que cóme y máma: Commend me that child which eats and ſucks. That is, it will be ſound and ſtrong, and thrive.

Prov. Los níños de pequéños, que no áy caſtígo déſpues pára éllos: Curb children when they are little, for afterwards there is no puniſhment for them. A true ſaying, that they muſt be form'd in their infancy, becauſe afterwards it is hard to break them.

Prov. Si el niño lloráre, acállelo ſu mádre; ſi no quiſiére callár, déxelo lorár: If the child cries, let the mother huſh it; and if he will not be huſht, ſhe muſt let him cry. This was taken from two ſcholars, who travelling to Salamanca with little money and good ſtomachs, came to an inn, where there was a child cry'd ſo inceſſantly, that many paſſengers would not ſtay becauſe of the noiſe. The ſcholars ask'd why he cry'd, and the mother anſwering ſhe did not know, one of them told her, he had a ſpell that would huſh him; the parents promiſed to treat them both for it, and one of them going aſide, writ the words of this proverb on a piece of paper, lapp'd it up in a piece of green ſilk, ſeal'd it up, and hung it about the child's neck. The child weary with crying, and pleaſed with that bauble, was huſht. The parents pleas'd, treated the ſcholars very well; and a long time after deſiring to know this ſpell, open'd the ſilk, and found theſe words on the paper, and were ever laugh'd at by all that heard the ſtory.

Prov. Al niño y al múlo en el cúlo: You muſt ſtrike a child and a mule on the breech; and not in other parts, where it may hurt them.

Prov. Quién con niños ſe écha, cagáda ſe levánta: He who lies down with children, riſes beſhit. This is literally true; but met. it ſignifies, that thoſe who rely on children, ſpoil all their buſineſs.

Prov.

Prov. A'ra con niños, y ſegarás cadíllos: Plow with children, and you'll reap weeds. That is, employ children, and your buſineſs will come to nothing.

NUE'VA BISCA'YA, a province of North America, to the north-weſt of the kingdom of Mexico, and bordering on the province of the Zacatecas. It is rich, and abounding in all things neceſſary for human life, but above all has a mighty treaſure in ſilver mines.

NUE'VA ESPA'ÑA, the richeſt kingdom in North America, containing ſeveral provinces, and call'd by us indifferently New Spain, or Mexico. Its bounds, as laid out now, extend 400 leagues in length, and 200 in breadth, including the province of Yucatan. They are, on the north the province of Mechocan, and others of North America, on the ſouth the government of Guatimala, on the eaſt the North Sea, and on the weſt the South Sea. Beſides its vaſt riches in ſilver mines, it enjoys a rich ſoil, producing all things neceſſary for life, and vaſt numbers of cattle; the only thing it wants is wine. The climate is for the the moſt part pleaſant and wholſome, and much more might be ſaid in its commendation, too long for this place, which may be ſeen in Laet. Acoſta, Herrera, and many other authors.

NUE'VA FRA'NCIA, New France, a great part of North America, on both ſides the great river Canada, reaching from 40 degrees of north latitude to 55, but a great part of it lies up the inland, upon the back of Virginia and New England. It is in the poſſeſſion of the French, who have many colonies and forts there, and a very great trade for furs.

NUE'VA GALÍCIA, New Galicia, a province of North America, otherwiſe called Guadalajara, from its capital city of that name, and by another name, Xaliſco, from the principal diſtrict in it. On the eaſt and north, it is divided from New Spain, by the moraſs of Chiapala,; and on the weſt, it extends to the ſea of California; towards the north and north-weſt, its bounds are not ſettled as running out among the ſavage nations. The part inhabited by the Spaniards extends about 300 leagues in length, and 100 in breadth. Under this government are the provinces of Guadalajara, Xaliſco, Zacatecas, Chiametla, Culuacan, Cinaloa, Nueva Biſcaya, and the frontiers of California, Quivira, and New Mexico. The climate is temperate and ſerene, yet ſubject to thunder and earthquakes; the land more mountainous than plain, and has rich mines of ſilver and copper, but none found as yet of gold.

NUE'VA INGLATE'RRA, New England, a large country in North America, firſt enter'd by the Engliſh in 1584; it lies along the ocean, on which it has good harbours; the air is wholſome, but the weather very uncertain; it abounds in wild fowl, wild beaſts, and timber, and produces flax, hemp, corn, furs, amber, and iron. In it are 7 good towns, the chief of them Boſton.

NUE'VA MEXICO, New Mexico, a large province of North America, to the north of New Spain, its bounds not well known; but its principal city is Santa Fe, its air temperate, pleaſant and wholſom, its ſoil fruitful, and rich in mines of ſilver.

NUE'VA PLYMOUTH, New Plymouth, an Engliſh colony in New England.

NUE'VO RE'YNO DE GRANA'DA, the new kingdom of Granada in South America. It is in length 130 leagues, and about 30 in breadth. On the eaſt it borders on the province of Venezuela, on the north upon Santa Marta, on the weſt upon the province of Popayan, and towards the ſouth on inland countries, as yet not well known. It is ſubject to great rains, and full of vaſt woods, which abound in black cattle and horſes, abundance of the latter being ſent hence to Peru. Its principal provinces are Bogota and Tunia, both of them have gold mines and emerauds, but eſpecially Tunia. The air is temperate and equal, making a continual ſummer.

Nuéz de la gárgánta, the nut or knot in the throat.

Nuéz de bálléſta, the nut of the croſs-bow.

Nuez de eſpècia, the well-known ſpice called nutmeg. The tree is about the bigneſs of a pear-tree, the leaf roundiſh, but pointed. It grows beſt in Banda, ſuch as Maluco and Ceilon produce, being leſs, and not valu'd. The outward rind is fleſhy and hard, which the natives eat with ſalt and vinegar, and is of a pleaſant aromatick taſte. The Portugueſe preſerve the whole nutmeg before it is full ripe. The nut is much us'd by the Brachman phyſicians for all old diſtempers in the brain, for the palſy, and other diſtempers that affect the nerves, and for diſeaſes in the matrix. The outward rind, when thorough ripe, is taken off, and is the ſpice we commonly call mace, which is hot and dry in the third degree, it is believ'd that the antients knew neither the mace nor nutmeg. Nutmeg corrects and cures a ſtinking breath, clears the eye-ſight, comforts the ſtomach, digeſts meat, and expels wind; ſtrengthens the liver and milt, and provokes urine. Chriſt. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. E. Ind.

NUE'ZES encarceládas. Many are of opinion theſe are the ſame ſort of wall-nuts we have in Europe, and that if tranſplanted, they would come to good; whereas, as they now grow wild, there is ſcarce any coming at the kernel, and therefore they call them encarceladas, that is, impriſon'd. F. Joſ. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 26. p. 258.

Pimentón, Guinea pepper, which grows in long green cods, and when dry, turns red, being full of yelloviſh flat ſeeds; both the cod and ſeeds very hot; pickled green they are excellent, but very ſtrong.

Pimie'nta, pepper; the plant it grows on is like a vine, but is always cloſe to a tree or pole, up which it runs to the very top; it bears within a year, but more every year after; it is knotty at ſmall diſtances, and out of every knot grows a leaf, ſharp at the end, of a dark green on the inſide, and a light green without; the root is very ſmall and ſuperficial; at every ſtalk of a leaf grows a cluſter of pepper, ſome of which have fifty corns, and the leaſt 30; the pepper, when green, is pluck'd like capers, to eat; and in India they call it achor. The plants of the white and black pepper differ in nothing, but that the leaf of the white is thinner, and ſomewhat ſmoother; the white pepper is better than the black, either for taſte, reliſh, or wholeſomneſs. There is alſo a ſort of long pepper, the plant whereof differs from the other, and the pepper it ſelf is much inferior to both the white and black. This long pepper grows in Bengala and Jaoa, the white and black along the coaſt of Malabar, and ſome other places, but not ſo good. There is another ſort, which is hollow, and call'd among them, canarin. The Malabars call pepper molang; the Canarines, miri; in Malaca, lada; in Arabia, filfil; in Guzurat and Decan, meriche; in Bengala, morvis; in Greek, peperi; in Latin, piper; in Portugueſe, pimenta; in Catalonia, pebre; in Italian, pepe; in French, poivre; in High-Dutch, pfeffer; in Flemmiſh, peperen. PLA'TA, ſilver, the metal next in value to gold. It is generally found in mines on ſtony deſert mountains, tho' ſome little has been found in the plain. There are two ſorts of veins, one whereof they call looſe, the other fixt. The looſe are only pieces of oar found in ſome chance place, which once taken away there is no more. The fix'd veins, or thoſe which ſpread out every way in depth, and on all ſides, like the body of a tree and its branches. The Indian way of refining the oar was by melting, which makes the metal run one way and the droſs another. To this purpoſe at Potoſi they made little earthen fire-pans, which they call guairas, with holes all round them, on which they plac'd the crucible, and ſetting theſe pans on the tops of the mountains, the wind that blows there conſtantly melted the oar, which could not be made to run with any bellows whatſoever. The ſilver of the mines of Porco runs better with bellows. But the method moſt in uſe now is to ſeparate the ſilver from the droſs with quick-ſilver, thus: They pound the oar to duſt in mills, and ſift it as we do rubbiſh to make mortar, then they ſteep that fine duſt in brine made of ſalt, that the ſalt may looſen the earth from the metal, then through a fine cloth they ſqueeze the quickſilver out upon that maſs, ſo that it falls like a dew, which they work up, mould, and incorporate with it. Thus it us'd to lie together, and was moulded over ſeveral times for twenty days, till the quickſilver had wrought its effect; but now making fires in vaults under it, they find it is prepar'd in five days by the heat. When the quickſilver has drawn all the metal to it, they put this maſs into great troughs of water, where they waſh it till all the droſs runs off, and the pure metal remains behind. The clean ſilver they ſqueeze in a cloth, which fetches out all the quickſilver that is not incorporated in it. The reſt of the maſs, made like a ſugar-loaf, is cover'd over with an earthen pan of that ſhape, and a great fire being made about it, all the quickſilver runs out at a pipe, like diſtill'd water from a limbick, and the ſilver remains in the ſame ſhape, and as big as it was put in, but only the fifth part in weight of what it was, being all like a honey-comb, where the quickſilver has been extracted. Then it is caſt into bars, and carry'd to the king's ſtamping-houſe, where it is try'd, and the mark ſet upon it according to its fineneſs, Pla'tano, the common plane-tree. Lat. platanus.

Pla'tano, or rather Plantáno, the plantane, is a tree in the Weſt Indies, which had this name given it by the Spaniards, but for what reaſon is not known, ſince there is not the leaſt reſemblance betwixt this and the plane-tree of Europe. This Indian plantan has one body or root in the ground, from which many ſhoots run up without touching one another, but every one grows up, and becomes as it were a diſtinct tree, with leaves ſo large, that one of them will cover a man almoſt from head to foot, of a very fine gloſſy green. When it is a fathom and an half, or two fathoms high, it bears only one cluſter of plantans, ſometimes more, ſometimes leſs in number, and I have told 300 upon one cluſter. Every plantan is above a ſpan long, more or leſs, and two or three inches thick, though they vary very much. The rind is eaſily taken off, and all the reſt is a ſolid tender pulp, very good to eat, being wholſom and nouriſhing, and rather cold than hot. Sometimes the branches are gather'd green, and ripen in great jars cloſe cover'd with an herb peculiar for that purpoſe. If they let them ripen on the tree they are better reliſh'd, and ſmell like choice pippins. They laſt almoſt all the year, for new ſhoots are continually running up from the trunk of the plantan, and when one has done, another begins to bear, another is half grown, another ſhoots out anew, ſo that they ſucceed one another all the year about. As ſoon as the cluſter is gather'd, they cut down that branch or ſhoot, for it never bears more than one, and once, but the trunk or root remains and ſhoots afreſh till it is ſpent, which is for ſeveral years. It requires much moiſture and heat. They throw aſhes on the root to improve it, and there are woods of plantans which are very profitable, becauſe it is the fruit moſt generally uſed in the Weſt Indies. They make wine of it, and eat it raw, roaſted, ſeveral ways dreſs'd and preſerved. The branches are neither good for fire nor any other uſe, but the leaves may ſerve to write on in caſe of neceſſity. The beſt is the freſheſt, which has ſomething of a dark red, bitter, and aſtringent to the taſte; and which chew'd, dies like ſaffron: it is hot and dry in the ſecond degree, has ſome earthy parts which make it aſtringent, ſome airy, whence its lightneſs, and ſome fiery, which cauſe its bitterneſs. Rhubarb is ſo ſafe a medicine, that it is given at all times, and to children, and women with child. To purge and cleanſe the inward parts, they give the infuſion of it, and the powder of it to bind; mix'd with ſpikenard, it has the better effect. It will not bear decoction, for then it loſes its virtue; it purges choler and flegm, cleanſes the ſtomach, ſtrengthens the liver and milt, opens obſtructions, purges the blood, is good againſt the yellow jaundice and dropſy, allays burning fevers, and ſtops the bloody-flux. *Chriſt. SUE.

SUE'CA, a town in the kingdom of Valencia in Spain, four leagues from the city Valencia, on the banks of the river Xucár, in a most delicious fruitful country, producing, besides all other things for human life, abundance of rice, and silk. It contains 400 houses, 1 parish, and 1 chapel.

SUE'CO, a wooden shoe, or sandal. Also a Swede.

SUE'GRA, a mother-in-law by marriage, the wife's, or the husband's mother. Lat. socrus.

Prov. No se acuérda la suégra, que fué nuéra: The mother-in-law does not remember she was a daughter-in-law. We say, the parson forgets he was clark.

Prov. Pára mi no puédo, y devanaré pára mi suégra: I cannot wind (thread or yarn) for my self, and I shall do it for my mother-in-law. Very unlikely that those who will not work for themselves should do it for those they do not love.

Prov. Aquélla es bién casáda, que ni tiéne suégra, ni cuñáda: She is well marry'd, who has neither mother-in-law, nor sister-in-law by her husband. Because in Spain they have no good conceit of that kindred by affinity.

Prov. La suégra rogáda, y la ólla reposáda: The mother-in-law must be intreated, and the pot stand to steep after boiling. That is, sons and daughters-in-law are to show respect to their mother in-law, and the meat and pottage eats the better for standing a while close cover'd in the pot, after it is taken off the fire.

Prov. Al que tiéne suégra, cédo se le muéra: May he that has a mother-in-law have her die quickly. Because of the ill opinion Spaniards have of mothers-in law.

Prov. A suégras béodas, tinájas llénas: Drunken mothers-in-law should have full jars or casks of wine. Because if they love drinking it is better to have it in the house, than be always sending for it.

Prov. 'Obra començáda, no te la véa suégra, ni cuñáda: Let not your mother-in-law, nor daughter-in-law see the work you have begun. Because they have an ill conceit of these relations; and therefore it is not fit to let them know what you are about till it is done, lest they obstruct it, or take pleasure in your not finishing it.

SUE'GRO, a father-in-law by marriage, the wife's, or the husband's father. Lat. socer.

Prov. Aunqué mi suégro séa buéno, no quiéro pérro con cencérro: Tho my father-in-law is a good man, I will not have a dog with a bell. The saying of one who had a good father-in-law in all respects, excepting only that he told all he saw, or heard, and therefore he compar'd him to a dog with a bell, who never stirs but he is heard.

Prov. Assí médre mi suégro, cómo la cáma tras el fuégo: May my father-in law thrive as the bed does by the fire. Either sparks fly and burn it, or people sit on it, or other misfortunes befal it, and the same ill fate the proverb wishes a father-in-law.

Prov. Apáña suégro, para quién te heréde, mánto de lúto, coraçón alégre: Gather wealth father-in-law for your heir, who will have a mourning cloak, and a joyful heart. A good admonition for those that never cease scraping together for their heirs, who put on a joyful mourning when they dye.

Prov. Pára mi no puédo, y devanaré pára mi suégro: This is explain'd under the word suégra, being the same verbatim; only apply'd to the father, or the mother-in-law.

Dormír a suéño suélto, to sleep sound without any disturbance.

Dezir el suéño y la soltúra, to tell a man his dream, and the exposition of it. Met. to tell a man all one's mind with a great deal of freedom.

Prov. Tornó sele el suéño del pérro: It was like the dog's dream to him. The dog dreamt he was eating a piece of meat, and lay biting and snapping, for which his master beat him, and so he awak'd without meat and was beaten. Apply'd to those who fancy they can compass great matters, and come off with loss.

Prov. Cásate verás, perderás suéño, núnca dormirás: marry, and you'll see what comes of it, you'll lose your rest, and never sleep. Matrimony brings on many cares, and breaks mens rest.

Prov. De los suéños no créas málos, ni buénos: Of dreams believe neither the good nor the bad. Do not be ſuperſtitious, and give credit to any dreams at all.

Prov. Suéño ſoſſegádo, no téme nubládo: Quiet ſleep fears no foul weather. That is, he who ſleeps ſound, has no apprehenſions, fears, or cares upon him.

Prov. Yó no duérmo, y a tódos dóy malſuéño: I do not ſleep, and I break every bodys reſt. Said of thoſe, who becauſe they are uneaſy will ſuffer no body to be quiet.

The froſt and ſnow is ſo far from hurting, that they ſeem pleaſing to them. Their colour is a light murry. They go in flocks, and are very ſwift, flying from men, or other beaſts, as being very fearful; and when they fly they drive their young before them. They do not appear to increaſe much, and therefore the Inga Kings had forbid hunting them but upon great ſolemnities. Since the coming of the Spaniards too much liberty has been allow'd; the Indians meet 2 or 3000, and making a ring, cloſe by degrees, and catch as many as they pleaſe, leting go the females to breed. They ſhear them, and of their wool make the fineſt coverlets or blankets in the world; for it is as ſoft as ſilk, very laſting, and the colour being natural, never fades. They are cool and good for hot weather; and ſome ſay they are wholeſom for inflammations, or the gout. The fleſh of them is not good; but the Indians eat it. The ſame fleſh juſt kill'd applied to the eyes, infallibly aſſwages any pain in them. Theſe beaſts alſo afford the precious Bezoar ſtone. *F. Joſ. Acoſt. nat. hiſt. W.
